Nina Valerie Kolowratnik, *1983, is an architectural researcher and consultant on spatial notation living and working in Vienna and New York. She has been educated at the Graz University of Technology and holds a degree in Critical Curatorial and Conceptual Practices in Architecture from GSAPP Columbia University, New York.
She is currently teaching as a lecturer at Vienna University of Technology and as adjunct assistant professor at GSAPP Columbia University New York, where she has been working also as an exhibition coordinator for the Arthur Ross Architecture Gallery.
Kolowratnik's practice is situated in the context of forced migration and socio-cultural claims to land and property, and develops spatial notational systems that operate as productive destabilizers within legal and human rights debates. Her recent projects include a case study on Palestinian refugee return, a research on notational systems within evidentiary production for a Native American land claim in New Mexico and a publication and travelling exhibition on states of refuge in and around Austria.
